Abstract. The ultimate form of responsibility must fundamentally involve management and this has hardly been apparent in the journey Indonesian church institutions in general as their operations are commonly associated with belief or faith. The author studied a large religious organization based in the city of Medan - North Sumatra that manages 14 branches with 50,000 church members as an organization that has attained management standard certification, namely the ISO 9001-2015 Quality Management System. By meeting such high expectations the church will provide satisfaction and yield trust, and openness to ecclesiastical institutions, resulting in security, comfort and peace in worship for existing church members. It is concluded that ecclesiastical institutions should dare to determine their attitude by adopting ISO 9001-2015 standards, which have been tested and succeeded well and satisfy the Bethel Church of Indonesia organization Jl. Jamin Ginting Km.11.5 number 6, Medan.

1 Introduction

In church institutions, accountability especially in the financial sector is considered very sensitive, given the involvement of the congregation in overall finance (offerings, donations, etc.). The ultimate form of responsibility must fundamentally involve management and this has hardly been apparent in the journey Indonesian church institutions in general as their operations are commonly associated with belief or faith. In the course of the post-modern era where the level of intelligence, knowledge, skills is higher, it is deemed necessary to provide responsibility in all areas as tangible achievements, especially in the financial division (including in church institutions). Such matters are still uncommon among ecclesiastical institutions in Indonesia; as if church members and workers do not need to know about the financial dynamics of the church and that this was previously handled by the pastor, church board members or church administrators. In this era of transparency, the above mentioned issues must be addressed according to the times, in order to create a sense of security and comfort among the congregation members.

2 Theoretical review

2.1 Management

Etymologically, the term management comes from the Latin "manus" which means "hand". In Italian "maneggiare" means controlling, in French "management" means the art of carrying out and regulating. Whereas in English the term management comes from the word "to manage" which means regulating. On the other hand, Robin (2005) describes management as a process of coordinating and integration of work activities to be adjusted efficiently and effectively with or through other people. From the various views above, it can be understood that management will be realized under the following conditions:
1. the existence of cooperation
2. joint objectives
3. division of work
4. formal relations

In addition to the above there has to be an ultimate goal of achieving a work program with monitoring and controlling capability. Thus management is a process to realize the desire to be achieved or desired by an organization, whether in business, social, government, or religious organizations.

2.2 Management in religious institutions

An old story of how a man named Moses, led a nation that entrusted to him by relying on his own ability to solve many problems he must face as a responsible leader. Then a man named Jethro after seeing the way of leadership of Moses gave it a suggestion that Moses share responsibility with people who become trusts to process problems that arise and make decisions (problem solving and decision making). Based on Jethro’s idea, Moses formed a team work to share the responsibility as follows:
1. Appoint a leader responsible for 1,000 people.
2. Appoint a leader responsible for 100 people.
3. Appoint a responsible leader for 50 people.
4. To appoint a responsible leader for 10 people.

In this way, delegation of authority is formed, enabling Moses as nation leaders to see things more broadly for the greater interest of the nation (control function). Based on the story above, it can be suspected that the management science has its origins in ancient times, which later is implemented into the modern age in various forms according to the development of the era itself. Drucker (2008) and Kotler (2009) as well as other experts have written in the topics of personal management, sales management, conflict management, health management, time and territorial management and ultimately quality management, known as ISO 9001 (International Standard Organization).

3.3 Benefits of ISO certification for churches

The advantages of implementing the ISO 9001: 2015 system are:

a. The needs and satisfaction of the congregation can be considered, understood and improved by implementing an effective system
b. The system can be reviewed/evaluated and repaired on an ongoing basis and there are guarantees in accordance with applicable requirements and regulations
c. There is good planning and reporting in the service process
d. The existence of a good management system and orderly administration increases service efficiency
e. Transparent in all fields and the church can be an example
f. Can plan actions to overcome risks and opportunities in service
g. Establish quality objectives and planning to achieve measurable targets, relevant to service suitability, monitored and updated
h. Services can be socialized to all congregations and related parties
i. Good documentation control prevents forgery and theft of documents and facilitates identification and retrieval. Each service part process can be designed, developed and reviewed according to the needs of the congregation (preparation of teaching materials, training, sermons, events, service schedules etc.) and can controlled according to the doctrine and needs of the church
j. Monitoring, measurement, analysis and evaluation can be carried out on the performance, application and effectiveness of the quality management system
k. Preventive actions can be taken against errors, shortcomings and weaknesses in the service process system and corrective actions towards improvement

4 Conclusion

Based on the situation and conditions presented above, it can be concluded that the long journey of church institutions in Indonesia has reached the finish line of the first stage and it is expected that churches take corrective action and experience a change of attitude to enter the era of transparency suit the times and continue the journey to the next stage. The author suggests that ecclesiastical institutions should dare to determine their attitude by adopting ISO 9001-2015 standards, which have been tested and succeeded well and satisfy the Bethel Church of Indonesia organization Jl. JaminGinting Km.11.5 number 6, Medan. By meeting such high expectations the church will provide satisfaction and yield trust, and openness to ecclesiastical institutions, resulting in security, comfort and peace in worship for existing church members.
